1. Annual and Personal Leave

In this fictional training policy, full-time employees receive 18 days of paid annual leave for each calendar year. Annual leave is intended for rest, personal commitments, and planned time away from work. Part-time employees and employees who join or leave during the year should check their individual entitlement with People Operations.

Employees should submit planned leave in the leave system at least five working days before the first day away. The request should include the dates and a brief handover plan for important work. Managers consider team coverage, customer commitments, and previously approved absences before responding. Employees should wait for approval before making non-refundable travel arrangements.

When practical, employees are encouraged to schedule leave throughout the year rather than allowing a large balance to accumulate. The leave system is the official record of requests, approvals, and balances. If the displayed balance appears incorrect, the employee should contact People Operations with the dates in question.

2. Sick Leave and Unexpected Absence

An employee who is unable to work because of illness should notify their manager as soon as reasonably possible. The employee should use the normal team communication channel and record the absence in the leave system when able. A colleague should not be expected to disclose private medical details on the employee’s behalf.

A medical certificate may be requested for an absence lasting more than three consecutive working days. Any document containing medical information should be sent only through the approved confidential process. Managers should keep absence details private and share them only with people who need the information to arrange work or provide support.

If an illness begins during the workday, the employee should tell the manager and agree on urgent handoffs before signing off, where possible. Managers should identify time-sensitive tasks and arrange cover without asking the employee to work while unwell. Questions about accommodations or extended absence should be discussed with People Operations.

3. Handover, Holidays, and Questions

Before planned leave, employees should update project notes, identify deadlines during their absence, and tell the relevant teammate how to find essential files. The handover should focus on work continuity and should not require sharing personal account credentials. Managers confirm coverage for customer-facing duties and communicate any temporary ownership changes.

Public holidays and office closure dates are published in the company calendar. Employees who need to work on a holiday should agree the arrangement with their manager in advance and follow the applicable time-off process. Leave requests that overlap with a public holiday should be entered according to the leave system instructions.

People Operations can answer questions about eligibility, balances, documentation, and special circumstances. Employees should raise corrections as soon as they notice them. Managers are expected to apply this example policy consistently while considering applicable local law and individual employment terms.

This document is a fictional training example. It does not replace an employer’s current policy or local legal requirements.
