Remote Work Policy

1. Eligibility and Weekly Schedule

This fictional remote work policy allows eligible employees to work remotely up to two days per week with manager approval. Remote work is an arrangement for performing normal duties away from the office; it does not change role expectations, working hours, or service commitments.

Employees and managers should agree on a regular schedule that supports customer needs, team collaboration, and individual responsibilities. The employee records remote days on the shared calendar. A manager may ask for an in-office day for a planned workshop, customer meeting, equipment need, or other business reason, with reasonable notice where possible.

Remote work is not automatic for every role. Duties that require secure facilities, specialized equipment, or in-person service may need a different arrangement. Managers should explain eligibility decisions and apply the criteria consistently across comparable roles.

2. Availability, Workspace, and Equipment

Remote employees must be available during their agreed working hours, attend scheduled meetings, and keep their work calendar accurate. They should tell their manager and teammates when they are unavailable, including breaks or appointments that affect coverage. Performance is assessed by work outcomes and responsibilities, not by whether an employee is physically visible online every minute.

Employees should use company-approved equipment and a secure network. Public Wi-Fi should be avoided unless the approved secure connection is active. Work devices should be protected from access by other household members and should be stored safely when not in use.

Contact IT for support with equipment, connectivity, or access issues. Do not install unapproved software or use a personal device to store company files without authorization. If equipment is damaged or lost, report it promptly so IT can protect data and arrange next steps.

3. Collaboration, Safety, and Review

Teams should agree how to handle handoffs, urgent questions, and customer coverage on remote days. Project updates belong in the shared team workspace so colleagues can find current information. Meetings may be held in person when requested with reasonable notice, and the organizer should provide a clear purpose and agenda.

Employees are responsible for maintaining a safe and suitable work area and following ergonomic guidance. Report a work-related injury or equipment hazard through the normal process. Managers should check that remote arrangements remain workable and discuss changes if delivery, wellbeing, or team coordination is affected.

Remote arrangements may be reviewed when role duties or business needs change. Employees should raise concerns early with their manager or People Operations. The policy should be applied consistently and in accordance with applicable employment terms and local law.
